Customer Reviews

This book delves into the world of paranormal psychology, something I've always been admittedly cynical about. I chose to read it anyway because of the author- hello, Nora Roberts!- and I'm glad I did. David Brady is a documentary director with plenty of charisma and the idea that love is not for him. He meets A.J. Fields, a tough as nails agent to the stars, and is bowled over. A.J. doesn't have time for love. She's spent her life caring for her slightly flaky mother, Clarissa, now she's focused on making the business she's built up from the ground the very best it can be. When

Clarissa is approached to be part of David's documentary, A.J. is naturally worried for her famous client and keeps an eagle eye on the proceedings, which brings her closer to David than she's comfortable with and triggers her own psychic dreams. The chemistry leaps off the page between these two and made the story for me. I love the author's talent at bringing characters to life in such a way you feel you could meet them on the street. I give Mind Over Matter 4 lovely kisses

Not as complicated or layered as others by Roberts, but enjoyable. I miss the intrigue and complex storylines she is so known for. The very well developed side stories that enrich the read without taking a thing away from the prime characters.

The author tells a story like no one else. Her story is like watching a movie in your mind. Great read!

This book was just that: sweet, low-key, uncomplicated. And you know, there are times when really that is just exactly what you need, all that you want.

Great storytelling

Favorite author. Always enjoy her books

I was bored with it, which is very odd for a Nora Roberts book. Each chapter seemed to essentially replay the last.

Another good story by Nora Roberts. Just like all her others, you can't put it down. No one writes a better story.
